By Thread Standardizing Machines: 1, Check plate; 2, hand feed screw; 3, hand set screw to hold fittings in place; 4, thread milling cutter; 5, coupling chuck; 6, spring loaded stop; 7, wing nut to lock chuck in position—Photos by Ted Law.

STANDARDIZATION IN

90 SECONDS

IT HAS BEEN estimated the 10 different sizes of fire hose and fittings commonly used in America require couplings totaling 462 different combinations of major diameter and 17 different threads per inch to meet the needs of the fire service. It may appear to the casual observer that hose thread standardization, like the weather, is a subject of conversation but no one actually does much about it.

SEE NEXT PAGE

1 Above: Chuck in raised position. Coupling is centered by placing against inside stop and screwing centering plug (chuck in the left hand) into place. Back end of the plug is tapered to fit hole.

2 Right: Hand set screws are tightened to hold coupling centered snug against chuck stop. When done the centering plug is removed.

3 For right: Check lowered with coupling locked in place. Coupling in the chuck is then pushed over thread milling cutter until the plug hits its stop.
